

The object of the work utilizes three thematic groups of Russian comparisons in relation to a negative aspects of the human character. Phraseological units of each group are analyzed by a semantic and structural perspective. An etymologic explanation is introduced and then phraseological units are illustrated within a Russian context. The foundations of the Russian and Czech languages are deduced by exploration of the differences and similarities of the phraseological units.