

The purpose of this bachelor thesis is to analyze an internal migration of Vietnamese in the region Teplice. In first section are described important waves of migration from Vietnam to the Czech Republic. After that are compared three groups of immigrants (Ukrainians, Vietnamese and Russians) by the quantitative methods. They are compared in the terms of demographic, socio-economic and spatial distribution. In main part are analyzed structured interviews with Vietnamese. Thanks to that, we can recognize their reasons for immigration, their internal mobility and their future plans of moving. A part of this work is focused on relationship between the province of origin of Vietnamese and their migration or on relationship of the capital city Prague as a gateway city.
