

This thesis deals with the experience of teachers who work with children with special needs. It tries to map how today's teachers are informed about this disability and how they approach children with special needs through an exploratory study. Using a combined questionnaire we try to find out how the teachers are working with children with special needs, what they think about the children's integration into normal classes (inclusive education) and how they assess the results in partnership with educational psychologists, clinic and with parents.