Abstract

Diploma thesis "The issue of eternal clause in connection with the theory of Francis Fukuyama" deals with existence and meaning of eternal clause. It tries to find connection between eternal clause and theory of Francis Fukuyama about end of history. Eternal clause is article or articles, which take out basic elements of liberal democracy from disposition of majority in parliament. So the main meaning of eternal clause is to defend these elements against democracy itself. Diploma thesis deals with historical development of countries, which have eternal clause and by this, it tries to find link between these countries. In second part, diploma thesis deals with function and importance of eternal clause in example of Czech eternal clause, which is the most specific. It discusses status and power of eternal clause and outlines theoretical problems connected with eternal clause in Czech Republic. At the end diploma thesis focuses on theory of Francis Fukuyama about end of history. It focuses on critics of Fukuyama’s theory and tries to find connection between his theory and eternal clause. The diploma thesis deals with the idea that the existence of eternal clause can be consider as real base for Fukuyama’s theory about end of history.