

Abstract

The aim of this thesis is to consider the integration of foreigners in the capital of the Czech Republic, with the focus on the Pakistani community.

The first part contains explanation of basic terms that are related to the integration of foreigners. Moreover, it includes description of integration policies. The second part focuses on characteristics of countries where the immigrants came from and also on mutual relations between country of emigration and country of immigration. The last, practical, part, which is the most important, is dedicated to research among members of the selected community and to problems of their integration into the dominant society on economical, social and cultural level.