

ABSTRACT

This bachelor thesis is concerned about family. The main topic is to exam attitude of university students towards family and family life and their opinion about family policy. First part of the thesis deals with theoretical approach to the examined topic. The main content of the first part is familiarizing with basic terms, characteristic of society, parenthood and family policy.

The second part is mainly about the research itself. The results of research prove that family as a basic unit loses it's importance for young people and individual personality becomes more important. Most of informants plans to start a family, but in time of financial stability and after satisfying their needs of "enjoying life". The research also proved, that students of pedagogical faculty plan to start family sooner than students of technical or economical fields. Results also shown, that martial status in time of born of first child is also important for the informants. Students also want to start a family regardless on financial support from the state, but they would use it if there will be the chance. By their opinion state's family policy should support more young families with children.

The results are compared with opinions and researches of experts, which leads to final conclusion of this thesis - getting to know the attitude of students towards the family life in the end.