

The thesis deals with cross-border cooperation in the Czech-Polish borderland. The Broumov region is a peripheral region which is situated along the border. The location provides good opportunities for cooperation. The aim of the work is to discover how possibilities of cross-border cooperation are perceived in the region by the municipality representatives. The research is based on a structured interview.