

Abstract

The bachelor thesis „Targeting of active labour market programmes in Czech Republic” deals with used early assessment methods, selection criteria to individual active employment policy programs and finally with evaluation of targeting of labour market programmes by labour office workers.

The first part deals with explaining the essential concepts related to the targeting of active labour market programmes. The thesis then briefly introduced the idea of active employment policies, as well as active labour market programmes. The following present the possible ways of targeting these programs, at the end of the first part are listed the possible methods of identifying high-risk candidates.

The second part consists of the results of qualitative analysis that was conducted through interviews with labour office workers. Based on these interviews it is clear that for these workers the most important is individual approach to each job seeker.