

Abstract

This bachelor work deals with history and present of migration policy of France and Spain. Emphasis is put on the influence of the project Union for the Mediterranean, which has been introduced by former french president Nicolas Sarkozy as a continuation of Barcelon process, which had been lingering at the time. The work is observing the proces of creation of the Union for the Mediteranean. It briefly mentions wider political aspects of this creation but specifically put emphasis on its influence on migration policies of examined states.

Important aspect which is playing a key role in migration policy of both states is process of creation of common european migration policy. This process and the treaties which started this process are also observed on thes pages.

At the end this bachelor work summarizes what we've learned about migration policy of France and Spain, compares their approaches and briefly mentions possible future development.