

Creation of optimal cutting plans is an important task in many types of industry. In this work we present a novel evolutionary algorithm designed to deal with this problem. The algorithm assumes rectangular shapes of the objects and creates a cutting plan which is can be cut out using a circular saw. The output is presented in a form usable by automatic saws as well as graphically. The algorithm reduces the amount of the material used and, moreover, also reduces the number of needed employees.