Abstract

The goal of my diploma thesis is to analyze retraining as an effective way of fighting the unemployment. Retraining is one of the most common means of pro-active employment policy. In my research I have focused on the efficiency of retraining and long-term enhancement for the retrained individuals. The research has been conducted on a chosen fragment of those, who participated in educational project, which was carried out in 2006 – 2008. Based on personal questioning and questioners, too, I have come to the conclusion on long-term enhancement of retraining projects and set up recommendation to make the retraining courses more effective.

Keywords: unemployment, labor market, employment policy, retraining