

The theme of this bachelor thesis is the description of cohousing – a model of housing which combines elements supporting community ties with elements focused on the privacy of individual. Thesis deals with approach of this phenomenon to socio-geographical science by valuation of migration motivations, which are connected with cohousing. Other objective is mapping of the evolution and expansion of cohousing style of housing in the Czech Republic. More detailed study is devoted to the first cohousing project in the Czech Republic which was not implemented. The project is the illustration of barriers that may occur while forming cohousing.