

ABSTRACT

The rigorous thesis is devoted to the analysis of the legal principles of the environmental protection that help to fulfill gaps in the legal regulations, represent support for the interpretation and application of the law. The objective of the thesis is to analyze selected legal principles of the environmental protection (additionally extra-legal principles). The rigorous thesis is divided into three main chapters. The first chapter deals with legally-theoretical definition of the legal principle, with the attributes of the legal principles, meaning of the legal principles and its function in the law. The following chapter pays attention to the legal principles of the environmental protection from the general point of view, thus the characteristics, specificity and typology of the legal principle of the environmental protection. The third chapter represents the crucial part of the thesis, where selected legal principles are analyzed, the characteristics, expression in the law and the application of the principles is being examined.
