

This bachelor thesis deals with the synthesis of bifunctional carbonyl derivatives of pyrazine, which are further examined for their potential to form dynamic hemiacetals with monofunctional alcohols. Newly prepared, in the literature not yet described bifunctional trifluoromethyl derivatives exhibit considerable ability to form hemiacetals in a dynamic system. The obtained results show that these substances may find application as building blocks of dynamic combinatorial systems.