Title: The influence of the psyche on the relationship between dance partners.

Goals: The bachelor thesis deals with dance sport, especially the latin american dances, in conjunction with effect of psyche on relationship and subsequent performance of dancers. The thesis will focus on psychological states of individuals, their emotion, social interaction and cooperation in the couple. The aim is to do a literature review, accompanied with the information generated from non-standardized questionnaire, which will serve as one of sources of informations. The questionnaire will be sent to sport dance clubs in the Czech Republic, including the author's home club STK - Prague.

Methods: As a method the author used interviews using a non-standardized questionnaire. The research group is composed of latin american dance couples, who are stratified according to their relational ties. The results are further processed through individual charts in Excel spreadsheets.

Results: In Latin American dances is the basic functional unit of dancing couple and the leader is man. Half of the respondents use psychological preparation in their training. Only one respondent working with a sports psychologist regularly. Based on the responses received to the questions in a unstandardized questionnaire we can confirm, that the better cooperation and harmonization is in couple forming only professional partners.

Key words: mentality, dance sport, dance couple, personality, emocionality, communication