

Abstract

The name of the work: The influence of the specific conditions on the configuration of diving equipment

The objectives of the work: The aim of this work is to create a comprehensive view of the most commonly used configuration diving equipment, during the diving itself affected by specific conditions and its most important part of the historical development to the present. The properties the most frequently used configurations.

Methods: For the completion of information about configuring diving equipment has been chosen, the analysis of the literature and current internet resources which are related to areas of diving. To select a suitable diving kits were used informatik not only from literature, internet resources, but it was also used personal experiences supplemented by informal interviews with divers.

Results: The result of this work is an assessment of the configurations of diving equipment that affect specific conditions

Keywords: Diving, specific conditions, dive configuration, dive equipment

