

As a thesis topic I chose the controversial and often discussed the topic "Domestic violence and alcohol as a trigger factor for aggression." In the general population of the Czech population, however, long dominated by number of entrenched myths. The aim of this thesis is to describe the phenomenon of domestic violence, generally explain the basic concepts, types, forms, consequences for victims of domestic violence often carry lifetime. One chapter describes those thugs, not just for men. Violent person, mainly in relation to the elderly and children, may be a woman. The work is to imagine an organization dealing with domestic violence in the Czech Republic and describe the work of the police. Alcohol surely affects human behavior and is often a factor present in the accompanying violence against a loved one.

The inquiry was to determine the extent of contact persons phenomenon of domestic violence and how to track down the victim subjectively perceive alcohol as a cause of aggression. Since this is a phenomenon highly latent, to get information, he was elected quantitative research interviewing technique and anonymous questionnaires. The questionnaires contained 10 questions, which focused on the experiences of people from the general population and those undergoing treatment in a psychiatric hospital. The practical part contains interviews with three women who have a common denominator, domestic violence and alcohol. The respondents were residents of a small town in the highlands and those hospitalized in a psychiatric hospital in the Highlands, where he treats people addicted to substances and treating persons with mental disorders.

The researchers set up three research questions related to both the difference of contact persons from the general population and treating persons with mental illness. In addition, find out what are subjectively perceived consequences of domestic violence and whether people consider alcohol as a cause of domestic violence.
