

The main interest of this paper is finding collisions in the hash function MD5. We present our new algorithm based on Wang et al. methods of finding collisions in MD5. While writing this thesis Stevens and Klima published their fast algorithms for finding collisions. We give a description of these algorithms and the calculation of computational complexity of all three algorithms.