

Abstract

The PhDr. thesis deals with the Czechoslovak-British relations in 1953-1957. The thesis is divided into the three spheres, which are analysing the development in the aforementioned period. Each sphere has own chapter. These chapters are political and diplomatic one, economic one and last but not least cultural one. The political chapter starts with part about the basic political framework of international relations in the aforementioned period, the next part deals with brief summary of post-war development of mutual political relations. The next main part of chapter offers apart from the research of mutual relations quality in the aforementioned period also the influence of German question and Suez Crisis in Czechoslovak-British relations. The political chapter concludes with the evaluation part of Czechoslovak-British political relations quality. The economic chapter is opened with the brief introduction of post-war development of mutual economic relations. The next main part of chapter is dedicated to analysis of own mutual relations in the aforementioned period and also to the sphere of nuclear power for civilian use in Czechoslovak-British relations. The same as the previous chapter also the economic chapter is concluded with the evaluation part of Czechoslovak-British economic relations quality. The final cultural chapter starts with mentions of brief summary of post-war development. The next main part of chapter mentions apart from the analysis of own mutual relations in the aforementioned period also Whitehaven fund and Lidice Shall Live Committee. The cultural chapter is concluded again with the evaluation part of Czechoslovak-British cultural relations quality.
