

This presented diploma thesis deals with general sense and methodology of microseismic monitoring during hydraulic fracture stimulation of unconventional resources. Main goal is to evaluate effect of neglecting velocity model structure and seismic anisotropy on source mechanisms (strike-slip a dip-slip) determined by inversion of noisy P-wave amplitudes acquired at surface or nearsurface.