The first few chapters of the rigorous discuss the definition, types and theories of domestic violence. I explore potential gender-specific aspects of domestic violence, with a separate chapter devoted to victims of domestic violence. Building on the introductory chapters I proceed to analyze criminal offences related to domestic violence, including related verdicts. In the procedural area I focus in particular on custody, victims' property rights, and the payment of damages to the plaintiff. This section is closed off by a discussion of police and civil interventions in cases of domestic violence. The final part of the dissertation analyzes domestic violence in the context of international law, providing a comparison with the legal order of the Slovak Republic.
