Sharing opinions and feeling on the Internet (blogging) is becoming increasingly popular with passing years. Application developers reacted to this trend and created many desktop applications making publishing simple. But almost none of these applications bring the whole power of the blogging engine to the user. We decided to fill this gap by designing a plugin-extensible desktop application capable of accessing any blog and harnessing all its potential, while still remaining simple and intuitive. By completing our intent, we created an application powerful enough for an exert user, yet simple enough for an average blogger. This application effectively fills the gap left open by more publishing-focused blogging tools.
