

Abstract

This thesis attempts to look into the physical self-concept of adolescents located in the psychiatric clinics.

Clients of psychiatric clinics mean the target group of this work. The theme of own's body and a carnality during the adolescence is an important role and it is perceived very sensitively and intimately.

The thesis is divided into a theoretical and a practical part. The theoretical part deals with a physical self-concept within the general issue of self-concept. Furthermore, it defines an adolescence as a period of developmental changes. The article ends with a pathology in the perception of own body and its treatment. The practical part consists of a custom qualitative research work. The aim of this work is to capture how adolescents with psychiatric problems perceive and experience their body and how they treat it then.
