

Abstract

This thesis focuses on the appearance of public spaces in the suburban communities in northeastern hinterland of Prague. The main objective is to describe and evaluate the importance of public spaces and use a specific group - women with children. Research into public spaces is based on several assumptions made in the introduction, which are compared with findings from empirical research collected qualitative method. The results showed that public spaces in the suburban communities exist and are useful. Important role is attributed to civil society organizations that use public spaces for social events that lead to their recovery and promote the development of social interaction.
