Bachelor thesis deals with nursing care in long- term hospital, how it is seen valued by patients and their family members.

Care for patients in Medical institutions for long-term patients still ranks among frequently discussed topics. Public opinion on care for patients in Medical institutions for long-term patients has rarely been positive. Not even media contribute to a good reputation of these institutions.

Currently geriatrics patient is associated mainly with nursing care, social and long-term constitutional. Very important part in a care about old person is their family and its active involvement into care.

Research investigation is focused on environment of long- term hospital, communication, attitude of care staff and care about patients. Researched sample were 103 patients and 92 family members in three long- term hospitals in Eastern Bohemia region.

This work has found out that 77-80% of patients are satisfied with the background of Medical institutions for long-term patients, 80-90 % of patients are happy about quality of communication, the amount of given information and about visiting hours. 91-97 % of patients are positive about nursing and attitude of the personnel. Only 74 % of patients are satisfied with the rehabilitation care.

Responses of patients and family members do not show any significant differences.
