

Specific factors of social exclusion of older persons and their reflection in public administration

Abstract

This work deals with social exclusion of older people. First try on the analysis of the concept of social exclusion to find a framework through which could later be studied its occurrence in a group of seniors. This framework is the definition of general elements that characterize social exclusion in terms of social, economic and political, which allows you to set specific indicators, which can then be examined in a group of seniors. This work is defined as the proportion of the population older than sixty years. He also works with the theme of health, which is provided as a determinant, which affects all other dimensions. The individual results gradually that seniors as a group generally show a tendency towards higher incidence of social exclusion than the general population or the unemployed. Identified dimensions were then tested using analysis of secondary data set of European social Survey 2008. Another intention of this work was to deal with reflections identified dimensions and their occurrence in public administration and the various levels identified based on the concept of multilevel governance. Reflections on the individual dimensions of social exclusion and was performed at international, national and local. Analysis at the local level was carried out in city Chrudim based on analysis of this city, in which specific activities were identified in the area, which deals with the work. The reason for this analysis was to capture the real process of public administration and its impact on social exclusion of older people in the lowest possible levels of public administration and in the end it turned out that in both cities is the issue to be reflected through concrete in the area of available resources.
