Abstract

This thesis addresses the question of legal institutions of intellectual property rights to protection against unfair competition. In particular, discusses the right to mark, its individual subjects and disputes arising from them. Through case law, administrative decisions and decisions of special established bodies points to the fundamental aspects of unfair competition from the perspective of industrial rights. Above all, it deals with trade marks, domain names and trade names.