Abstract

The intention of this thesis is to present the functioning of the social security system in the Czech Republic and individual benefits available to women in different periods of their lives within the system. Attention is focused on the benefits designed exclusively for women, benefits that are predominantly received by women, and benefits for which some of the eligibility criteria are defined differently for women. The thesis also contains a chapter dealing with the development of legislation on some benefits provided by this system to women in our territory from the 2nd half of 18th century, as well as a chapter focusing of the special protection of women in employment relationships.
