

Abstract

This diploma thesis deals with issues of activities of NGOs in the frame of state integration policy and is based on the supposition that NGOs are important powerful factors which can influence and change state integration policy of foreigners in the Czech Republic. The main goal is to map NGOs engaged in the topic and examine their ways, structure and types of influencing public policy in the area. The theoretical part concerns description of issues of migration and its development in the CR, deals with Czech integration policy and describes theoretical types of influencing public policy and relationships between the state and NGOs. The empirical part includes basic information about particular NGOs and analysis of interviews with representatives of NGOs and the institutions and departments of state and an overall summary of the research. The discovered findings from the research and evaluated achieved aims are placed at the end of the thesis.