

The main goal of this thesis was to monitor experience of users of social networking websites with privacy issues in the environment of the Facebook network. This thesis concentrated on contexts of paradox situations of releasing private information. Perspectives of communication (what information is shared and with whom) in the environment of Facebook are institutionalised into technical functions. These perspectives were extended to a subject-object level thanks to a typology of invasions of privacy and thanks to architecture of privacy.