

The first chapter analyses cultural politics of Czechoslovak Communist Party in the field of classical music and a general role of culture in Czechoslovakia at the end of 1940's and the beginning of 1950's. Other parts are dedicated to the impact of social and political circumstances on Czech Philharmonic and to the activities and inner functioning of the orchestra during Karel Ančerl's period as a chief conductor.