

National and Political Cleansing in Mohelnice 1945-1948.
Expulsion – Transfer - Retribution

Jaromír Mrňka, Institute of Economic and Social History FF UK, 2011.

Bachelor thesis 'National and Political Cleansing in Mohelnice 1945-1948. Expulsion – Transfer – Retribution' copes with theme WWII aftermath cleansing processes in town of Mohelnice in northern Moravia during the period of the so called Third Czechoslovakian Republic. In the context of long-term development of Czech-German relations in the region and other context of revolutionary changes in a structure of post-war society, thesis examines involvement of particular historical players during the period of the so called expulsion of Germans and wild retribution from May till July 1945, in the execution of the so called Great decree from July 1945 and in the organized phase of the transfer of German population in the region during the year 1946. Thesis studies motivations and changes of social status of defendants of the Great decree in the connection with their engagement in structures of the NSDAP.