The primary objective of this thesis is to study and summarize the current algorithms used in computer chess and their subsequent implementation. The thesis includes a program that in addition to regular single-player game of chess against the computer leaves the user the option of used algorithms and setting their parameters. The theoretical part focuses on chess programming procedures and their illustrative explanation. Several experiments were performed with artificial intelligence algorithms and their results are presented here.