

This thesis deals with analysing multivariate financial and economical data. The first section describes various types of econometric systems of equations, vector autoregression and constructing models based on this theory. The second part deals with analysing the dependence of time series of inflation rates on various macroeconomical indicators and reciprocal dependence of two exchange rates time series. All results were obtained by the Mathematica 8.0 software.