

The thesis describes contemporary Japanese view of present-day China. During last thirty years this view has changed from mutual respect to sense of rivalry. There are several reasons for that change. The first one is rise of Chinese and Japanese nationalism. The second one is problematic interpretation of Second World War in Japanese history textbooks. The third one is different economic, demographic and military development of Japan and China. Last reason covers territorial disputes between the two countries.