

Abstract

Title: Canine service as the other component of the IZS

Objectives: The aim of this thesis is a summary of the activities of professional and volunteer cynologists cooperating with the components of the integrated rescue system. Clarify the content of individual components and indicate how much they contribute or are involved, the terms and conditions to be met in order to be used.

Methods: Was used method of collecting data - gathering information from available sources. Further research method was used - searching for information from available sources, study them and list this information as a result.

Results: It was created by an overview of the components and organizations engaged in cynology what extent they are used, what conditions they must meet in order to be deployed within the IZS intervention.

Keywords: rescue, cynology, dog, handler, search by person