

ABSTRAKT

The theme of this thesis is "Access to services for people with mental disorder." The present study provides an overview of mental health. It is important to mention factors that influence it. Last but not least, study is focused on the protection of mental health and mental illness and describes the activities of the association that the protection and promotion of the deal. The object of this study is a mental disorder, its possible causes, as well as diagnosis, treatment and negative consequences of diseases. The key part of the thesis is a qualitative and interpretive analysis of psychiatric care in the Czech Republic mainly between the years 1997 to 2009, including statistical data and texts relating to the availability of services for people with mental disorder. The availability of these services, we find through the health care needs in this area. To detect, we chose the factor of consumption of health care. The study also deals with health policy focusing on documents and programs of the mentally ill. In conclusion, it describes the current state of psychiatric care and availability of services in the Czech Republic for persons with mental disorder. It is derived from the Institute of Health Information and Statistics, and materials involved in psychiatric care and affordability, which are mentioned in undergraduate thesis.

Keywords: mental health, mental disorder, psychiatric care, accessibility, health policy