

The goal of this thesis is to design and implement a modern parser generator. The result is a program that reads description of some context-free LALR(1) grammar and semantic actions from an input file. To output files the program generates source codes in several target modern object-oriented programming languages for implementation of the syntax analyzer which, when parsing the language corresponding to the given grammar, executes the given semantic actions.