Geometric programming is a special case of nonlinear programming, where objective function and constraints are shaped as posynomials. In this work we introduce geometric programming and solving methods. In~last chapter we will apply the geometric programming to Cobb-Douglas production function, create a model with random demand and possible extensions of this model.