Abstract
This thesis deals with the life of Armenian immigrants in the Czech Republic, especially in Prague Armenian community. The thesis begins with a theoretical part, which contains two chapters. The first chapter deals with the ethnogenesis and history of the nation. The historical part is discussed rather briefly, but seeks all the moments that were crucial for the Armenians. In the second chapter, I write about important incentives for migration and the global Armenian diaspora.

The main part of the thesis is based on field research among the migrants, which ran from February to April 2013. This chapter resolves the issue migration, integration into the new environment, the identity of Armenians, community relations and relations with other nations. I also document here the overall opinion of the Armenians on the Czech Republic. The last chapter is the result of a questionnaire survey among the citizens of Czech nationality, to detect their knowledge and opinion about Armenia and Armenians.
