

Abstract

The diploma thesis “The Hybrid Regime and the Democracy in Peru – the Regime of Alberto Fujimori.” will be focused on the regime of Alberto Fujimori in Peru in the scope of theories of hybrid regimes, a theory of “neopopulism” and a theory of “autogolpe”. The theoretical frame of the thesis is based on theories of hybrid regimes by Larry Diamond and Guillermo O’Donnell, further on a theory of “neopopulism” by Kurt Weyland and a theoretical analysis of the “autogolpe” by Maxwell A. Cameron. The thesis will be focused on the fact whether the examined regime corresponds to one type of hybrid regimes based on criteria of the theoretical framework and whether it is the case of “neopopulism”. As factors that could affect the form of Fujimori’s regime there will be analysed campaigns of guerrilla groups Shining Path and MRTA and the solution of the economic crisis. The aim of the diploma thesis is the analysis of Fujimori’s government, thus the finding, whether it is possible to mark the regime as hybrid and which type specifically. The thesis will use the method of comparative analysis for comparison purposes to compare countries where was or may be realized “autogolpe”. Then there will be used a case study to describe the events that preceded the election of president Fujimori and then the description of the regime itself in Peru during the this period. Comparative analysis will compare the concrete aspects of A. Fujimori’s presidential regime with other countries in the Latin America region in this period.
