

Abstract

The thesis is written on the topic of International Legal Conservation of Cetaceans and captures important legal questions in maintaining the status of cetaceans in order to maintain their population. The work examines the sources of international law in the conservation of cetaceans both global and regional levels, which usually arise the respective commitments of the international character to the Czech Republic.