

Abstract

The bachelor thesis 'Pupil's attitudes to the issue of punishments' concerns the viewing of punishments by students of higher primary school in Skuhrov nad Bělou. The theoretical part deals with the issue of the personality definitions of a pupil and a teacher, it describes various educational styles and last but not least, penalties, their definitions, types and functions. The practical part is based on a quantitative survey among the pupils of primary school in Skuhrov nad Bělou. It focuses on their points of view and familiarity of the definitions and types of punishments. Furthermore, it examines their own experiences with penalties. The aim of this thesis is to ascertain opinions of the interviewed pupils in order to sort out their views and, where appropriate, to compare them with the views of adults that have already been carried.
