

This bachelor thesis deals with crisis situations of mothers with children, who were compelled to seek aid either within their own family or in shelter house.

The theoretical part works at concept of family. We can distinguish two types of families - well functioning family and clinical family. The second chapter deals with concept of unmarried mother's family which also falls into the clinical families. There are lots of forms of aid which can mothers utilize. One of these forms is shelter house which was paid close attention to.

The empirical component of this work comprises three groups of utterances or respondents respectively. The first group contains women who already have lived in sanctuary house, and nowadays they live independently. The second group of women lives nowadays in shelter house and they are getting ready for an independent life. The last group includes mothers without any relations to some institutions.

It was used some standardized interview with open-ended questions and observations also. In conclusion there are some pieces of advice and suggestions which can help mothers to protect from this crisis situations.