

Abstract in English:

Culture is an integral part of civil society. Its positive effect on human being affects whole society. Social relations are created by culture. For that culture is perceived as public service to which is necessary to create appropriate atmosphere for its development. There are a number of instruments which can do that, for example legislative atmosphere, cultural politics of state, regions and towns, public and private support and motivation of citizens to participate actively. According to theatres in Prague I try to describe these instruments and to find out which legal form is the most appropriate for cultural subjects from the legislative point of view and practical functioning.
