

Abstract

Psychological Aspects of Victimization in Police Practice

The thesis deals with still more discussed issue of crime victims (of mostly wilful crimes, nevertheless exceptionally also of unintentional crimes) and their victimization. Consideration is given to victim herself, to her status in our society and to the role, which during the crime scene plays. Special emphasize is placed on the victim in terms of the process of abusing the victim and of the trauma in which such treatment results. The whole problematic is replenished with numerus experience from the police practice and from the practice of the police psychologist. In an effort to prevent from victimization, the section is attached dealing with possible ways of solving traumatic situations, i.e. prevention of this phenomenon. Final part of the thesis consists of factual cases, which helps to document the problematic matter contained in the thesis.