

Abstract

The first purpose of my bachelor thesis is to describe and analyse the methods of early intervention for children with autism spectrum disorders (ASD). This theme is not in the Czech often processed, although it is a very important field that can greatly help a child in his development and parents in understanding the needs of the child. We will address the main areas of early intervention, which are functional communication training, game and self-care skills as well as manners. The empirical part is mainly analysing these methods by using specific examples; two children with ADS. We would like to demonstrate the development of the various region of the examined children, the importance of the child for early intervention have. Finally, we would like to describe whether early intervention care have an impact on the family as an unit.
