

Based on postprocessualism theories, this master's thesis provides data for setting up the Centre of Experimental Archaeology in Únětice near Prague, designed to pursue an experimental research of Unetice culture agriculture settlement. This project aims to provide space for carrying out archaeological experiments on the one hand, and to present the results of archaeological research to public in an innovative way on the other. In addition, it might play an important role in the touristic development of the village.