

This master's thesis is concerned with Hegel's concept of civil society. After an introduction of the contemporary normative concepts of civil society and their research potential, it provides a detailed description and interpretation of Hegel's concept, with a special emphasis on three major interpretative approaches. The final part of the thesis also includes the author's own interpretation of this concept.