

ABSTRACT

The aim of this work is to show what humane after spinal cord injury get through and what is the impact of acquired disability in the future. First, I discuss the level of health and physical consequences of the spinal cord injury. The following chapter is focused on the psychosocial impact of injuries and subsequent paralysis. On the section describing the body and mind follows the third chapter that focuses on hospital and rehabilitation care. The fourth chapter is devoted to social work with clients after spinal cord injury and the last chapter deals with life after the accident when a client is discharged from hospital and rehabilitation facilities, and begins a new life. To illustrate the issue I applied a case report of a woman after the accident and evaluate questionnaires that I sent people after an accident with a higher degree of disability.
